CHAPLAINS ELECTED.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 20.—[Special.]—"They are going to count Kellogg," said one of the colored Representatives. "They have elected him to go on to the vote-ship, but have secured with him up to the adequate to operate the machinery. He has not made the running. They selected him in the Senate counted election case yesterday, having him to stand cushion down, and now in the committee on the expenses of engrossing he has set up the claim of the last session. He chose to pose as the friend of the engrossing and to appear as the savior of a committee to secure them some pay. He apparently overlooked the fact that it would not be wise for him to encourage an increase in the cost of the administration of Chandler. The House can be expected, and now the committee is a committee with the donations to inquire whether any engrossing were discharged at the end of the last session and persons put in their places who found the work of the long session. Without doing much, but the Republicans found, especially in view of the coming election, that they had to do something to please the engrossing committee, and secured a resolution to that effect. They will have to do it, however

He felt that the intimation was unanimous there that the Vanderbilts and Gould representatives have fallen into line, which is supposed to be an indication that the Northwestern and the Missouri Pacific will join hands with the lines now already consolidated, leaving the Burlington entirely out in the cold. The latter road has taken up the gage of battle, and announces its willingness to continue the contest single-handed. The fact more will undoubtedly be the construction of sufficient new track to make the Burlington practically independent of its powerful rivals.

PUTTING THE LAW'S EAR.

The friends, admirers, and compatriots of Patrick O'Donnell, recently hanged in Dorchester Jail, are carrying their enthusiasm after rather too far when they denounce the sentence Government as "inquitous" and "unwarrantable" because diplomatic relations with England have not been suspended in retaliation for the "insult" accorded to be inclosed to the refusal of the British Government to reprieve the Irish dynamiter to compliance with a request from the American State Department. The resignations of Congressmen Sullivan, Cox, Piercy, and others who think with them on this subject proceeds upon an entirely false basis. Their devotion to the imaginary "Irish Republic" dwarfs their allegiance to the real American Republic. They treat the acts of the United States Government as if it were bound primarily to the protection of Fenians in Great Britain, even when the latter resort to treasons and dynamite, and their ignore, even if they have ever understood, the principles and principles which should preside in American citizenship.

The fact is, that the interference of the American Government even in the cases of striking a capitave for O'Donnell, was hardly justifiable. The case is one which, as far as any evidence has been produced, in no way concerned the American Government. The British Government might fairly have made that answer to so many words. That is restricted from doing so was due probably to a diplomatic appreciation of the enormous pressure brought to bear in the country, which Mr. Cox-Irish name particularly is prominent, by the cast to the President, and the intervening which the English ordinance could naturally feel for the American politician a dilemma of this kind. But English refusal certainly involves no warrant for crying out against "American dictation" or charging corruption against the Government.

The cold facts, separated from the warmth of Fenianism, are about these:

1. There is no satisfactory evidence that O'Donnell was ever a citizen of the United States. When he first came to London he complained that English detectives were trying to identify him with the Irish-American party in order to prejudice his trial. He refused to set up American citizenship for him. He himself could never recognized and tried to had been naturalized—a charge he took of necessity, for naturalization and the resulting right to vote are generally regarded as the most important events in the life of those who take up their residence in this country. There has been no appeal at any time from O'Donnell or an American citizen not from entirely unfriendly to representation to that character.

2. The most direct evidence as to O'Donnell's connection with the Irish revolution has been alleged to Chicago and presented to the Secret Service. It comes from a gentleman residing in the Fourteenth Ward who was serving as Sergeant in Company B of the Five Hundred and Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteers, who says that O'Donnell enlisted in that company, was drunk two or three weeks, and then deserted. There is no other statement of his having served in the American army; and if the above statement be correct the law will shoot the military award the latter it will be for O'Donnell's reputation.

It cannot be pretended with any seriousness that these facts warranted the American Government in taking any belligerent action in O'Donnell's case, especially in view of the fact that if he had been a native American and had killed a British subject within British jurisdiction he would have been amenable to British law. The Government, urged by a spirit of demagogism in Congress, seems to have committed the folly of meddling in something which didn't concern it only to draw out the regretful condemnation of those who regard the folly open it. It is the usual result for interfering in other people's business.

The hoisting of the British Lion's tail is regarded in this country as a rather harmless amusement, because it pleases the natives and doesn't hurt the lion. But if it is to be moved to such an extent that the Irrisibles think the American Government must do their bidding it is time to undeceive them. In the meantime, a New York Irishman has earned the "contempt" for the American Government so far as an amount of to refuse to suspend relations with England that he has returned his certificate of naturalization to the court which issued it, and asked that his name be stricken from the rolls. Henceforth he will be simply "a citizen of the Irish Republic." The Irish "patriot" who are disposed to regard the American Republic as a "pollroot" because it does not espouse the cause of the Invincibles and declare war against Great Britain should follow the excellent example of Mr. John Lyon in New York—surrender their undeserved papers and repudiate their allegiance to the American Government. As this would involve a relief from Congress to some cases out of the efforts to have others, and disqualified by voting early and often at election times, it is to be hoped that Mr. Lyon's example will not spread with the rapidity and deplorable which would be desired.

"LAUGH FOR HUSBAND'S SAKE."

Mr. Dana, ex-Wing-Democrat, refuses to be put off with the concessions which the Cartter-Patterson faction of the Democratic party is willing to make in regard to "individual" proscription. He insists in his free open hating them in the strictest letter of the bond. "I will be reverse out," O Donnell to friend, "no one, I cannot love my enemies in it at all." It would be to raising a vast revenue on tea, coffee, and foreign products consumed in this country which do not enter into competition with home products. When it comes to compelling either to insist that the duties on tea and coal, as an example, be reduced to a point where the luxury product can be bought and sold at a profit to the country and thus yield a revenue to the Government, Mr. Dennis that "the question of protection is regarding to non-productive duties to necessity, fully, reasonably, and unanimously presented to be settled and disposed of in the Presidential election, or else that the Democrats who control the House shall frankly and honestly abandon the instrument of a tariff for revenue only, and give their party a tariff for revenue only, and give their party a tariff for revenue only, and give their party

The Grand Jury Interested to Learn Who Got the Chicago & Evanston Ramp.

Also the Jury's Investigation the Occasion to Confront the State Can Ultimately Be Reached.

The grand jury yesterday gave the informal promise to the newspaper men of the city that the sensational developments which would be made to-day would be of unusual interest. The promise was kept to the letter, and the jury had the most interesting session of the present month. The first witness called was Mr. Ellis, the contractor who had charge of the construction of the Chicago & Evanston Railroad, and the grand jury had summoned all the principal officials and the city attorney to appear before them and explain their connection with the matter. Mr. Ellis was the first witness called, but owing to the absence of Mr. Hutchinson, who was engaged in the Supreme Court, the examination was postponed until this morning. Mr. Ellis was then excused, but several days ought to be consumed in examining the official papers of the administration now superseded. The committee were called into the jury-room and instructed to let the jury all they knew about corruption in the Council, and also to ask other grave questions to prove the grossest charges published. As a rule the jurymen answered more readily to enlighten the jury on any questionable rumors. Some of the gentlemen told the jury what they knew about the Chicago & Evanston Railroad matter, and others gave information relative to the supposed existence of a "Boodle" committee.

The committee's views.

The session lasted nearly 4 o'clock, and a recess was taken by Mr. Goodman, when about the middle of the afternoon, when the committee returned, they had a consultation with the jury, and then the jury retired to their room. The committee's views were to interrogate the Council in favor of the Chicago & Evanston Railroad matter,

The cable news early in Chicago that the directors of the Union Pacific Road had at their meeting in that city yesterday adopted the tripartite agreement between that company, the Chicago & Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul roads, and that the Northwestern directors had ratified the action of their colleagues in the Union Pacific board, was the occasion of a good deal of excitement in the local stock market.
